- Infrastructure Secretary - In charge of ensuring that the technical infrastructure maintained by the society is in fully functioning order and able to cope with new requirements of the society throughout the year. 1.15 Presidents gain a “Benevolent Dictator for Life” (a common title in Programming subculture, often used to refer to the creator of a programming language, which although giving no formal power, implies respect of their opinion and expertise) status upon the end of their term. In this capacity they may act as an advisor to their successor and ensure the smooth conclusion of provisions that may not have been successfully completed in the length of their term; for example, a president begins to oversee a large sponsorship deal, but the discussions take more than a year and it is preferable for this member to continue oversight of the deal after their presidential term is up.

1.16 The Member of staff responsible for student experience within the School of Computer Science maintains the rank of voting officer. They may attend all committee meetings and be involved in decision making. The purpose of this is to benefit both the society, and the School of Computer Science in maintaining our close relationship and primary membership base.
